EAT 'EM UP YANKS

A TABOY! Did you read that story in the Bonanza last evening? If you did just read it again. It will do you good. If you have not read it take a good cigar and get yourself off into a corner of the desert where you can whoop and yell to your heart's content, for it is a thriller sure enough. None of your movie stuff, either. If you have a family call your boys and girls and the dear old mother to gather around to listen to the greatest story ever pulled off in American history.

The reading will do you good. It will do everybody good and make us all feel proud of the boys who have gone over there to do their duty.

You will find your heart thumping a little faster and the blood surge up hot and rebellious as in the days of youth when you pictured yourself tackling a band of bloodthirsty redskins all by your lone self.

The best traditions of the American army have been repeated away off in France, for distance does not add any special handicap to the Liberty Lads who are doing their first fighting for country and home. They are doing it right and, when it comes to a finish, these United States will be there sitting on the unruly head of the demon autocracy.

All Europe is thrilled with the reports from the front where a handful of Americans held the line against the assault of overpowering numbers and brought home the bacon to their sad-eyed and determined colleagues in arms—the gallant French compatriots. For three days and nights without rest and very little time to take a nibble of food the Yankee lads stood their ground so nobly that they saved the day and earned the plaudits of the allies. Seasoned troops, veterans of the trenches, men who have been leading the strenuous life until their strength and vitality is sapped and their enthusiasm has had its keen edge worn away were roused by the performance of our boys to an ebullition of sentiment that went ringing down the line and over the British channel until the whole old world echoed to the shouts and praise of the bravery of Les Americaines.

Put it there, old pal! It makes one feel younger and eager to get into the life of the boys who are making over the map of Europe and rewriting the history of the world. If ever there was a nepic that would cause the blood to tingle in the veins of a jelly-fish it is the recital of the first serious engagement of our boys. The charge of the Light Brigade is not in it with this drama, for that was a lost effort, while this was a victory of the heroic order, a victory that will go down to the end of time as the baptism of blood administered to our troops.

When the full story comes out every true-blooded American citizen should preserve a copy for his descendants that they may appreciate and canonize the memories of the boys who fought their way to the front and saved the day for the war-weary soldiers of France.

AIRPLANE OBSERVATIONS

CONGRESS has a faculty of muddling through every big performance affecting the fate of the country but, after struggling through a morass of doubt and uncertainty and dodging the shoals of graft the lawmakers in Washington appear to have sporadic touches of sense which cause the solons to do something really worth while. It was only three years ago that a prominent and active member of the naval establishment of the nation timidly suggested the propriety of doing something to protect our eastern coast cities from possible air raids. The officer was laughed into silence and then the country relapsed into a sense of safety such as the fool's paradise enjoyed by the idiot who sits in a powder magazine complacently smoking a pipe. The man who offered the suggestion, referred to recently in these columns, was none less than Commodore Peary. The father of the idea was ahead of the farmers from the middle west who could not see any reason for casting the horseshoe so far in advance of the lethargic dreams of the men residing securely along the banks of the Mississippi. The thought was spurned and the Atlantic coast left defenseless. The presence of submarines in the vicinity of New York has revived the story and predictions of Commodore Peary until now congress is growing frantic and the members falling over one another in a mad effort to do something that will save the capital from extinction under the bombardment of German airmen. It is proposed to spend $16,000,000 for aerial defenses that will serve to save the country's chief cities from destruction.

The suggestion is timely so far as it goes but, at the same time, it carries with it a sense of danger that must ensue from a war prolonged during the period required for the construction of these defenses. The building of these will occupy years, which means that the war will endure for that length of time and is a warning for all of us to place our houses in order and adjust our affairs for long drawn out hostilities.

DON'T PILLORY THE POOR

IN Philadelphia several of the "four minute men" who assisted in the last Liberty loan drive made a practice of referring to people who did not buy bonds as "slackers." The committee in charge of the drive in that city have since taken pains to disavow this harsh language and promise that it will not be repeated in any future drive in which they take part. There has been too much of a disposition to pillory people who have not been able to conform to preconceived standards set up for them by others. The general spirit of the American people has been most praiseworthy in every appeal which has been made to them—and the best evidence of this is to be found in the fact that so large a percentage of the population have become subscribers to the Liberty bonds in all issues. Harsh words break no bones, to be sure, as the old adage has it; but they do not contribute good feeling, either.

DEPLORES THE HABIT OF SPEAKING ENGLISH

(By Associated Press.)

AMSTERDAM, May 6.—(Correspondence of the Associated Press).—What the newspapers characterize as "the filthy and treacherous Teutonic habit of speaking English instead of good, honest, beautiful German" is condemned by the Cologne Volkszeitung, thus:

"Thousands among us would rather tie their tongues into a knot over an 'Irish stew' than use the good German word 'gulasch.' Is it really indispensable that the English should teach us how to eat and drink?"

"In our dwelling houses there are 'stores,' there is a 'dining room,' we still encumber ourselves with 'shawls,' 'slips,' 'sweaters,' and other 'fashionable' things. The German young woman knows exactly what is

'fair' and what is 'shocking.' Her school friend addresses her as 'my dear,' and the honest German 'handkerchief' is degraded into 'shake hands.'

"At parting it sounds so much more distinguished to say 'farewell' than 'lebewohl,' and on returning it is the correct thing to say 'how do you do?' in answer to which instantly comes the retort, 'very well,' which is supposed to be more cordial than our 'vorzueglich.'

"These lamentable lapses could be multiplied into the infinite, for there is not a single department of German life which they have not invaded. German people, pray, oh, pray do honor your own glorious German mother tongue and uproot the vapid English from your memory."

SMALL COPPER MINES MAY HAVE TO CLOSE

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 7.—The question as to what to do with the small copper-producing mines of the country is a most important one to which more attention is being paid than ever before.

All the copper the United States can produce is needed, but in view of the serious shortage of mine labor, the question is asked in copper circles whether encouragement to small producers would tend to increase the total production at this time.

It is contended that all miners should be so assigned as to obtain the maximum average production per man. There is plenty of copper; the trouble is to get it above ground with sufficient speed.

Producers also can attend to the fact that the average production per unit of man power is far more in large mines than in small ones.

One body is larger; stopes are larger, and ore can be broken down in huge quantities. It is stated that in one large mine a single blast recently loosened 200,000 tons of ore. Labor consumed in driving tunnels, shafts, crosscuts or other works necessary for ore extraction results in immeasurably greater production per man when such work taps the immense ore bodies which exist in leading mines of the country, than when it is employed correspondingly in small mines.

It is claimed that when large mines have both the ore and the extraction facilities it is national expediency to close every small mine until the big ones recuperate their forces to the limit.

Higher production costs of the small mines, in indicating lower average output per man employed, show that labor is absorbed without rendering maximum service to the country.

War has interfered with the labor supply in the copper districts, as well

ALASKAN FISHERIES YIELD FIFTY MILLIONS

(By Associated Press.)

WASHINGTON, June 7.—Fishery products of Alaska in 1917 were valued at $51,405,260, or more than seven times the purchase price paid by the United States to Russia for the entire territory, according to the bureau of fisheries.

Salmon represented 93 per cent of the year's total catch, amounting to $47,778,081, as compared with $1,150,226 for halibut, $767,729 for herring, and $744,976 for cod. Whaling operations returned products worth $653,852.

"This unprecedented yield of fishery products in Alaska at a time when the world is in need of food is an achievement for which the country may justly feel gratified," said an announcement by the bureau.

Fur products from Alaska were worth $1,031,638, exclusive of fur seal skins and fox skins, valued at $310,000, shipped by the government from the Pribiloff islands.

As in other lines, it takes time to make miners of entirely inexperienced men, and a general conscription of labor will not furnish a satisfactory source of supply.

Many interests hold that there are various feasible methods by which the government could compensate the owners of these small mines, approximately 1000 in number, for loss or deferred profits through enforced closing.

It is claimed that the expense thus entailed would be more than offset by the advantage accruing from the service of miners released, who would be employed to increase the output of the leading mines.

PERISCOPES USED AT A PRIZE FIGHT

CAMP KEARNY, San Diego, Cal., June 7.—Men of the 145th machine-gun battalion lay claim to a new utilization of the trench periscopes—that of looking over the other fellow's head in a crowd. At a boxing exhibition given here recently by Benny Leonard, lightweight champion of the world, several men who are below the average in height appeared in the crowd of standing soldiers armed with periscopes.

As the supply of periscopes was not as great as the demand, the instruments were passed about among the groups which had them, so that each man, though unable to see over the crowd in front of him, still had an opportunity for at least a glance at the champion in action.

RUSSIAN SECURITIES CAUSING MUCH CONCERN

(By Associated Press.)

LONDON, June 7.—British holders of Russian securities are showing increasing uneasiness in consequence of the financial chaos prevailing in Petrograd. It is being suggested that the government be asked to take steps for the formation of a committee to act with the board of trade for the purpose of protecting Russian interests held in this country.
